Hall Estill, a regional Southwestern law firm, with offices in Denver, Northwest Arkansas, Tulsa and Oklahoma City, has announced the addition of Zachary S. Al-Tabbaa to its Denver office.

"Adding intellectual property law expertise to our Denver team really enhances our ability to provide comprehensive legal services," said Kip Hunter, senior shareholder, in the Denver office. Al-Tabbaa joins Hall Estill after several years of experience representing clients in patent and trademark prosecution, complex civil litigation and business matters. In addition, he practices in intellectual property counseling, cybersecurity and data privacy, as well as commercial disputes.

"We are very pleased to expand our Denver office and add Zach's expertise to the mix," said Steve Ray, managing partner for Hall Estill.

While in law school, Al-Tabbaa served as an intern for the U.S. Patent and Trademark Office and for several boutique intellectual property firms in Colorado, gaining legal experience in all areas of intellectual property practice.
