Hall Estill Elects Three New Directors

June 3, 2024

Hall Estill, Oklahoma's leading law firm, is pleased to announce the election of three new members of its board of directors. With offices in Tulsa, Oklahoma City, Denver and Northwest Arkansas, Hall Estill continues its legacy of legal expertise and client-focused service.

"Our firm is pleased to announce the newest members of our board of directors. Their unique experiences and perspectives will be invaluable in guiding the future of our firm," said Steve Ray, Managing Partner at Hall Estill.

New Board of Directors:

Seth A. Day, based in the Oklahoma City office, is a general litigator with an emphasis in commercial litigation and civil litigation defense, including professional negligence, products liability and premises liability. Further, Day is currently serving as a board member of the Oklahoma County Bar Association.

Daniel R. Ketchum, II, based in the Tulsa office, focuses on trust and estate planning and administration, probate, and asset protection and business succession planning, as well as commercial transactions, business organizations and general corporate and partnership services. In addition, Ketchum is a Certified Public Accountant.

Bryan J. Nowlin, based in the Tulsa office, focuses his practice in the areas of commercial litigation, trust and estate litigation, municipal law and construction law, among others. Nowlin has represented several communities throughout the State of Oklahoma on topics ranging from water issues and construction disputes to annexation. Further, Nowlin is a frequent speaker regarding commercial litigation topics and is a former member of the Board of Directors for the Child Advocacy Network.
