Hall Estill Expands to Western Slope Through Affiliation with Grand Junction's Rider & Quesenberry

October 3, 2024

Businesses and individuals across the Western Slope will now have access to a wider array of premier legal services through a strategic affiliation between leading regional and national law firm Hall Estill and veteran Grand Junction law firm, Rider & Quesenberry. The collaboration will harness the extensive expertise of both firms, providing comprehensive legal support across various industries and practice areas throughout the region.

Hall Estill is headquartered in Tulsa, Oklahoma, with additional offices in Denver, Oklahoma City, and Northwest Arkansas. Lloyd Quesenberry heads up Rider & Quesenberry in Grand Junction and is pleased to join forces with Hall Estill's team of experts.

"We are thrilled to partner with Rider & Quesenberry establishing our presence along the Western Slope and expanding our Rocky Mountain reach. The combination of our capabilities along with Lloyd's regional expertise will provide a huge win for companies and businesses in Grand Junction and beyond," says Steve Ray, Hall Estill Managing Partner.

Lloyd Quesenberry's practice revolves around a wide variety of complex business matters, including business reorganization, financing, mergers and acquisitions, securities offerings, oil and gas, and general business matters.

"I am very excited about the opportunity to join forces with Hall Estill to provide my clients access to experts in a wide range of legal specialties while maintaining a Western Slope direct connection," explains Mr. Quesenberry. "As Western Colorado continues to grow, this partnership fills a critical need for high-caliber legal expertise across a wide-spectrum of practice areas."
