"This could obviously be a problem for many consumers since the actual products purchased were disclosed," Collin Walke, a cybersecurity and data privacy partner at national law firm Hall Estill, told Newsweek. "This means that customers' potentially sensitive medical information is now potentially out there for purchase and pilfer."

Collin R. Walke leads national law firm Hall Estill's Cybersecurity and Data Privacy practice. Prior to joining the firm, he served in the Oklahoma House of Representatives from 2016-2022 as the State Representative for House District 87.
