“Just like all of these aspects of our everyday life, the coronavirus could certainly have an impact on construction projects at home and abroad. Construction projects always have a ‘time for completion’ component and many contractual provisions may certainly come into play in any construction project which is affected by labor shortages from the coronavirus. Most construction contracts for large projects, including the typical AIA forms, have provisions making time of essence to the contract and certainly the scheduling of the contractor’s work is of utmost importance to most contracts,” Keester says.
