Tulsa Immigration Attorney Diane Hernandez spoke with HR Dive - Will Immigration Ban Hinder Recruiting?

"These individuals have, in most cases, already gone through long, costly, and highly detailed application processes and are at the end of the process, waiting only for the green card," Diane Hernandez, an attorney at the national law firm Hall Estill, said in an emailed statement. "It is possible that the administration has purposely limited this suspension to those seeking permanent residency and specifically not temporary visas such as H-1Bs because it knows, or has been advised, that suspending the H-1B program at this time would be catastrophic for many industries," Hernandez added.
